Heidelberg University - Future. Since 1386.

Heidelberg University, founded in 1386, is Germany's oldest university and one of the strongest research universities in all of Europe. Heidelberg University is a comprehensive university, offering the full spectrum of disciplines in the humanities, law and the social sciences alongside the natural and life sciences, including medicine. It is with more than 4000 medical students the only German university to host two medical faculties, one located in Heidelberg, the other in the city of Mannheim.

The over 600 years of education and research in medicine at Medical Faculty of Heidelberg have multiple implications: tradition, experience and a deep founded responsibility to conquer the incredible challenges that medicine of the 21st century presents. Medical Faculty Mannheim was founded in 1964 as a clinical-teaching oriented faculty. Since 2001 the faculty also stands out with achievements in research and finally became a full faculty in 2006 also offering pre-clinical studies in medicine. Both medical faculties, although different in their evolution and medical curricula, simultaneously and jointly engage in the fields of innovative teaching and research like interdisciplinary learning, professional as well as interprofessional competences, scientific working skills and last but not least offering manifold possibilities for international exchange.

All in all Heidelberg University is tied into a worldwide network of research and teaching collaborations. Exchange programmes have been established with around 450 universities worldwide which leads to Heidelberg University being ranked in the top 10 of German higher education institutions in terms of realized mobilities.

With its aspiration of connecting traditional values with future-oriented scientific concepts in research and teaching, Heidelberg University with its two medical faculties and excellently equipped and future-oriented university hospitals is building bridges to the next centuries according to its slogan: Future. Since 1386.
